

Hey Joe Guitar Media Kit About Us

The NYC-based music school, Hey Joe Guitar, can be described as a “matchmaker” of sorts. It doesn’t arrange marriages, but, rather, brings together people who want to learn to play an instrument or have voice lessons, with top instructors.

The school was started in 2007 by guitarist Joe Berger to meet the demand for excellent in-home music training. To date, it has successfully “matched” hundreds of students of all ages and levels with compatible teachers. The school offers lessons for a wide variety of instruments, including guitar, piano, voice, drums, trumpet, trombone, brass, reeds, saxophone, clarinet flute, violin, viola, cello, strings, accordion, ukulele, banjo, recorder, and mandolin. It also offers singing and songwriting lessons.

All the teachers affiliated with Hey Joe Guitar are graduates of top music schools and conservatories, and the majority hold master’s degrees in music and/or teaching. All of them have at least five years’ teaching experience.

For the customers’ comfort and convenience, the school makes “house calls,” pretty much the way doctors used to in the past. But, instead of stethoscopes, the instructors bring their musical instruments to the students’ homes or offices in Manhattan and Brooklyn.

Before the teachers are matched with their students, the school carefully vets them and ensures that they not only have the best credentials and qualifications, but also proper techniques of music instruction. That is a very important requirement, since some inadequately trained teachers pass on incorrect techniques to their students, resulting in a poor learning experience.

By emphasizing proper education, extensive professional experience, pleasant personality, as well as good communication and social skills, Hey Joe Guitar matches only the best and most reliable teachers with students.
